The Composition of the Gardens

The Gardens offer opportunities for visitors to appreciate a wide variety of trees and flowers in four seasons.

Honmaru Area

The wide expanse of lawn lies at the center of the Honmaru Area. The remains of the main tower of the Edo castle, gardens of roses, bambooes, cherry blossoms, tea trees, orchards of classical species and others encircle the lawn.

10 Classical species orchards

At the suggestion of His Majesty, planted here have been some fruit trees of old-fashioned species once popular in Japan till the latter half of the 19th century but now hardly seen. They include Japanese pear, peach, plum, citrus fruit, persimmon and Japanese apple.

11 Wild Grass Island

A variety of mainly native wild grasses were planted.

12 Oshibafu (Lawn)

Here, in November 1990, H.M. the Emperor held the Daijōsai enthronement rite (the first harvest festival of the reign).

16 Rose garden

Roses were transplanted from the residential quarter of the Imperial Palace following the suggestion by the Emperor.

19 Bamboo grove

Thirteen species of bamboo of Japanese and Chinese origins were transplanted again on the idea of the Emperor.

18 Cherry Blossoms Island

The East Gardens boast more than thirty species of cherry blossoms, half of which can be seen on the island.

29 Bairin-zaka Slope (Plum-grove Slope)

The grove features more than fifty plum trees of various kinds.

32 Ninomaru Grove

The grove was created following the suggestion by the Emperor Showa as an area reminiscent of woodlands which had been disappearing in and around Tokyo. The current Emperor saw to it that a brook ran through the grove, which was enlarged in 2002.

35 Ninomaru Garden

The Ninomaru Garden is a garden based on a 18th century garden map. A pond can be found today in nearly the same position as the original garden attributed to Kobori Enshu.

36 Iris garden

84 species of irises have been introduced from the famous Iris garden in Meiji Jingu.
